Research in Progress

"Archaeology, Tourism & Identity, El Salvador"

Independent Research conducted during May 1993- Aug. 1993

"Building Community-University Research Collaborations in the San Joaquin Valley" (On-Going)

What advances have been made and what lessons have been learned after five years of efforts to connect University of California researchers to San Joaquin Valley community-based organizations for problem-solving.

"Despotic States and Democratizing Nations: Remembering 1930s Racial Violence in the Dominican Republic" (Planning)

What are the new public sites of memory in Santo Domingo, the capital of the Dominican Republic that recall state repression of the Trujillo Dictatorship (1930- 1961) in particular the 1937 Parsley Massacre of approximately 10,000 Haitians who were working in the borderlands between Haiti and the Dominican Republic? What is the role of museums, academics, popular media, and government policy to bring this history to light for contemporary society? What do the emerging national memory projects communicate about the goals for the nation's future? The research will answer these questions. The result of the research will contribute to the development of a book proposal on the comparative study of social memory practices that re-define and reshape the meaning of national belonging. The research will provide a lens on a dynamic process as to how states and societies confront a bleak past. The intention is to integrate this project into a comparative case study with El Salvador and Spain.

"Emerging National Memories: Comparing Spain and El Salvador" (Planning)

Building on ongoing research about nation-building in postwar El Salvador, this new project will compare how scholars in Spain are studying emerging national memories about the Spanish Civil War and its aftermath

"Federated Coast Miwok: Collective Memory Project Northern California"

Independent Research conducted during 1994.

"Indigenous Immigration from Latin America: New Ethnic Communities and Native American Alliances in Northern California" (On-Going)

"Nation-building in postwar El Salvador" (On-Going)

State-led practices to shape meanings of national belonging including new attention to social memory regarding the civil war (1980-1992) and state-sanctioned massacre (1932). Includes fieldwork in El Salvador July 25-August 14, 2011.

"Partnership for the Assessment of Communities (PAC)" (On-Going)

Regional Study. On behalf of the California Partnership for the San Joaquin Valley. Co-PI with Simon Weffer
